President Biden's Summit for Democracy 2022

Deliberative Democracy & Citizens' Assembly Cohort

Preamble

“Democracy doesn't happen by accident. We have to renew it with each generation.”

President Biden at The Summit for Democracy Opening Session December 9, 2021

Many people legitimately feel like they do not have a voice, nor power, in shaping the decisions affecting their lives. Trust in experts has been declining, misinformation and disinformation are prevalent, and political polarisation – partly driven by electoral incentives – weakens our cohesiveness as societies.

Yet democracy has always been an idea larger than any one society and more than what happens at the ballot box. For people living under oppressive rule, it has been an idea and a hope that a better alternative awaits. With an endless bombardment of negativity, that light can only dim.

The work of our group demonstrates that the democratic renewal of our generation is alive and well – embodied by Citizens' Assemblies.

Citizens' Assemblies bring together a group of people broadly representative of society, giving them the time and resources to grapple with complexity, learn from experts and stakeholders, listen to one another, and find common ground on challenging policy issues – an exercise in public judgment akin to a criminal jury, and in contrast to public opinion found through polling and surveys. There have now been hundreds of them around the world at all levels of government, tackling issues from abortion to climate change, infrastructure investment, and much more.

Citizens' Assemblies do not just address the symptoms of democratic malaise, they get to the heart of the deeper, underlying drivers of it by making citizens truly central to our democracy. They recognise people's agency, dignity, and political power. They do so in a way complementary to our existing institutions by strengthening societal cohesion, overcoming polarisation, and rebuilding public trust.

They are effective in building trust by including people who don't tend to see themselves reflected in parliaments. They are effective at countering misinformation by giving people ample time to hear from and question diverse sources, including many of their own choosing. And polarization is reduced through the simple exercise of putting randomly chosen people in one room with a problem to solve and asking them to tell governments what they can agree on, and why.

This is not a concept, nor an academic idea. This has been run by the most senior leaders on the most vexing public issues. Our opportunity is to let people know that we have found a simple way to do democracy better, and let the message become one of strengthening, innovation and renewed trust and confidence in our free societies.

NATIONAL COMMITMENTS

PART A; LEARNING, EXPLORATION & COMMITTING TO OECD PRINCIPLES

Countries around the world have conducted hundreds of Citizens' Assemblies. Their learnings have been documented in good practice principles by the OECD. The following national commitments are designed to help countries learn and adopt them.

6. Host an informational workshop for elected representatives to ensure they are informed on the array of democratic innovations which are proving effective, and to generate an understanding of the critical success factors for their use.

Workshops bring together international experts, public servants and legislators and are practically orientated to equip leaders to understand how projects operate.

Milestone	Allocation of responsibility to Minister and department.
Budget	~$40,000
Implementation assistance	Cohort members can provide a program of speakers spanning from designers & practitioners through to elected representatives who have major project experience.

7. Join a Senior Ministerial Co-ordination Group for bi-annual calls to remain informed on international major project experiences using Citizens' Assemblies.

e.g. Ireland will conduct national Citizens' Assemblies on Drug Use and also the Future of Education in 2023, and this forum will be where updates & learnings on this and similar projects can be shared

9. Conduct a national-level Citizens' Assembly.

Governments commit to identifying a challenging reform issue and commissioning a Citizens' Assembly project on the topic. The project will include 50-100 citizens chosen in a Democratic Lottery being given an opportunity to freely respond to a tradeoff question with a self-written report.

Governments will commit to providing a substantive response to each recommendation within 90 days and at later moments when recommendations are turned into actual policy measures. These moments are clearly defined and communicated.

In keeping with the overarching goals of the summit, Democratic Innovation and Reform would be an appropriate topic for the Citizens' Assembly; the process could be complemented with other forms of public participation to elicit ideas and feedback from a larger number of citizens.

Milestone	Project announcement by PM or Minister. Response by government or parliament.
Budget	US$300,000 per location
Implementation assistance	Assistance with process design and implementation is available by contacting any cohort NGO.

The Declaration of the Cohort for Deliberative Democracy and Citizens' Assemblies.

[Sponsoring governments to finalise]

We stand with the Summit for Democracy in launching its new Cohort for Deliberative Democracy and Citizens Assemblies.

Democracy is more than what happens at the ballot box. One stunning success story is the 600 citizens assemblies of recent years. They offer a proven and pioneering way to build on existing democracy and give it a sustainable future with citizens fully engaged. It is the start of a new era for democracy.

Citizens offering reasons, listening to the views of others, carefully weighing evidence then coming to considered, shared judgements is democracy at its best. Today, we need nothing less.

The fight against autocracy can only ever be fully won when citizens have a meaningful role in decisions taken by their governments. People who feel left behind need to become an active part of the democratic process.

Our democracies can move beyond stark binary choices and invite citizens to think and to listen. As signatories we commit to pursue this ideal of a deliberative democracy; one with mechanisms that work to unite rather than divide.

Building on the lessons from previous deliberations and citizens assemblies we will apply new approaches to do democracy better. A truly engaged citizenry will be our strongest asset.

Our aspiration is to renew trust and faith in our democracy. We intend to nurture that globally, nationally and in the heart of every citizen.

We pledge to do all in our power through the Summit for Democracy to ensure that democracy's best days lie ahead.
